Methods and Experiences

In the development of medical devices and medicinal products, audits are an important tool for assuring the quality of clinical trials, i.e. the well-being of trial subjects, the integrity and validity of trial data and the transparency of the processes followed.

Now in its third, revised and expanded edition, GCP Auditing provides a comprehensive overview of GCP auditing methods and procedures, both in the clinical field and related areas such as production (GCP), pharmacovigilance (GVP), lab work (GCLP), non-interventional studies (NIS) and medicinal product trials. A description is provided of all audit steps from planning to completion, including every audit type used in clinical research and the above areas.

Aspects such as the auditing of computer systems and archiving are also addressed, along with the topics of risk management and inspections. People employed in the pharmaceutical/biotech industry, contract research organisations (CROs) and academic or commercial institutions will benefit from the authors' extensive quality assurance knowledge and experience in all areas of GCP auditing.
